

ABSTRACT

5 A semiconductor light-emitting device comprises a multilayer structure and a glass substrate. The multilayer structure includes a plurality of laminated compound semiconductor layers and generates light. The multilayer structure has a light exit face for emitting the generated light, whereas the glass substrate optically transparent to the light is bonded to the light exit face by a film made of silicon oxide.